General Rules for Writing Test Questions

- Express the item as clearly as possible
  - Ambiguous, imprecise, or otherwise not understood items will not discriminate well.
  - Let the difficulty arise from the content, not the wording.
- Choose words with precise meanings
  - Adjectives such as often, frequently, high/low, substantial, good, etc. should be avoided or clearly specified with criteria.
- Avoid complex or awkward word arrangements
  - Use standard rules of written English.
- Include all necessary qualifications
  - Students can't read minds.
  - Write items so that people with different perspectives can still agree on the right answer.

General Rules for Writing Test Questions

- Avoid superfluous information
  - Students are under time constraints
  - Superfluous information detracts from the primary focus of item
  - Can cause the student to be tricked or mislead
    - Generally hurts validity
    - Can cause considerable test anxiety
- Make difficulty of items appropriate for group
  - Avoid using too many items that
    - all students will know
    - only the ideal students will know
  - Test should mostly include items that measure what a typical student knows
    - Test the rules, rather than the exceptions

General Rules for Writing Test Questions

- Avoid irrelevant clues to the correct response
  - Pattern among keyed response
    - Select keyed location first
    - Randomly assign distractors to their locations

    - Alternatives lead to fragments or incoherent sentences
    - Alternatives are the wrong part of speech
  - Lack of parallel structure
    - Alternatives should be uniform with respect to specificity and length

Rules for Writing Multiple-Choice Items

- Provide a single response that experts agree is best.
  - Make keyed response unambiguously correct.
- Distractors must be plausible and attractive to those who lack knowledge.
  - Simulate the likely errors and misunderstandings
  - Use as many distractors as are plausible.
    - Don't include silly or absurd distractors
    - 4- and 5-alternative items are ideal

Summary: Writing Multiple-Choice Items

- Students particularly dislike MC testing and will try to use any strategy to help them succeed.
- The goal of the item writer is to be aware of the strategies and design items that cannot be answered using such strategies alone.
- Any aspect of the item or test that allows examinees to eliminate certain choices should be changed.
- Any aspect of the item or test that causes examinees to orient towards the key, without the proper knowledge, should be changed.
